PREFACE

This is the third and last publication listing manuscript holdings in the Royal Scottish Museum. The project ran from January 1979 to March 1982 and Joy Pitman is to be congratulated on her work in making the three manuscript collections of William Jardine, W.S. Bruce and J.A. Harvie-Brown more accessible to researchers. Any enquiries about these manuscript collections should be made to the Librarian. Some further manuscripts are also held by other departments in the Museum.

It has not been possible to organise and list fully the entire collection of Harvie-Brown manuscripts, which is the largest in the Museum. All correspondence has been filed alphabetically by correspondent, but there has not been time to do more than list briefly the types of subject material. The major part of this publication is therefore a list of Harvie-Brown's correspondents.

Once again thanks are due to Mrs. R. Sinclair for her excellent typing of this manuscript.

HARVIE-BROWN COLLECTION - INTRODUCTION

The Harvie-Brown Collection of manuscripts and papers was bequeathed to the Royal Scottish Museum (RSM) under the terms of the will of John Alexander Harvie-Brown, the Scottish naturalist (1844-1916), together with a large part of his library and reprints, and his collections of stuffed birds, bird skins and eggs. About half of his manuscript collection consists of correspondence, with the remainder being journals, notes and other miscellaneous material relating to natural history, principally Scottish fauna.

Harvie-Brown kept much of his correspondence together with other types of material in boxes under specific subject headings. As he worked on different subjects he appears to have frequently refiled material according to the current project. All the correspondence in the collection has now been brought together and filed alphabetically by correspondent, while lists of this correspondence have been left under the appropriate subject headings to indicate the condition of the collection when he ceased working with it. The correspondence consists mainly of letters received by Harvie-Brown, with a few drafts or copies of replies. He also acquired the correspondence (and some journals) of other naturalists, such as H.A. Macpherson, John Young and William Jardine (a list of Jardine's correspondence has been published as RSM Information Series: Natural History 7). Material in the subject files includes notes and notebooks by Harvie-Brown and others, photographs, and a variety of printed matter, including newspaper cuttings and reprints. A very brief summary of material arranged by subject is included after the list of correspondents.

Harvie-Brown was born in Edinburgh on 27 August, 1844, the only son of John Harvie (later Harvie-Brown) and the Dunipace heiress, Elizabeth Spottiswoode. He was educated at Merchiston School and the Universities of Edinburgh and Cambridge. At Cambridge he formed the friendship with Alfred Newton which was to last a life-time, as is reflected in the volume of correspondence from him in this collection. Harvie-Brown's interest in natural history began when he was a boy, and he was a keen sportsman, fisherman and collector all his life, although he also recognised the necessity for measures to conserve wild life.

Together with T.E. Buckley, Harvie-Brown edited, and largely wrote, a series of volumes on the vertebrate fauna of Scotland. He collected the information for these partly from his own observations, but mainly through his vast correspondence with other naturalists of the day, and an army of enthusiastic amateurs, including gamekeepers, taxidermists, and sportsmen, whom he encouraged with letters and presents of books. One of the principal correspondents in the collection is David Douglas, the Edinburgh publisher who handled the series. Most of the volumes are illustrated by photographs by the talented Fraserburgh photographer, William Norrie, many of whose prints are now in the subject files.

Harvie-Brown's speciality was ornithology, and he was particularly interested in the migration and dispersal of species. He was instrumental in the scheme for obtaining the co-operation of lighthouse keepers in recording valuable information on bird migration for the British Association studies. Harvie-Brown's correspondents include other members of that committee, such as R.M. Barrington and John Cordeaux. Harvie-Brown and Newton also arranged for the translation of H. Gatke's influential work on migration.

As well as writing numerous scientific articles of his own, Harvie-Brown was founder and joint editor of the Annals of Scottish Natural History. Another major correspondent is his fellow-editor William Eagle Clarke.

Harvie-Brown made numerous expeditions throughout Scotland, and on his yacht, the "Shiantelle". He also made two expeditions to Northern Europe to study the natural history, one with E.R. Alston and another with Henry Seebohm.

Many of the bird skins and specimens collected by Harvie-Brown and his friend H.W. Feilden (another major correspondent) were destroyed in a fire at Dunipace in 1897. His library, however, remained intact and some of his books on natural history and Scottish history are now in the RSM Library, which also holds a copy of his library catalogue prepared in 1908.

BIOGRAPHICAL SOURCES

Biographical information about correspondents has been obtained principally from A dictionary of universal biography of all ages and of all people, by Albert M. Hyamson. 2nd ed.
